and there is no doubt that Major Mc-Kinley was nominated for governor without opposition. His election would seem to be as much a matter of fact as his nomination, for among the younger generation of statesmen he is the most popular and the widest known, and in him as the Detroit Tribune well says, In exchange for Picture Frames, the Republican party recognizes the best type of party leader-a man of brains, of clean life, of high principles, one willing to fight day and night for the party and too, one who depends on the justice of his cause and the soundness of his argument to win the success he deserves. The whole Republican party is honored by such nominations.

In a ringing letter from Paris to a young Republican of Des Moines, Gen. J. S. Clarkson, president of the Republican National League, urges the utilization of the social and literary ambiclear vision, since he advocates meeting them with counter organizations of the same kind. In declaring that there should be at least 1,000 clubs organized in Iowa this year, he points out what should take place, not only in Iowa, but, proportionately to the Republican vote, in every state in the Union.
